Year after year, I have always found it fascinating to observe the many little changes in him when he comes back home: a little bit more mature, a little bit more independent, a stronger sense of who he is, a stronger confidence … and tons of memories, friendships that continue from one summer to the other.

My son has turned into a different kid since camp. He is so much more confident and self assured. He has learned how to handle his emotions better and is proud of who he is.

Not all boys have been given the same opportunity to learn, grow and thrive. That’s why Camp Abnaki embraces its motto to “Help the Other Fellow” through its annual Kids to Camp scholarship campaign.

Camp Abnaki is a place where character development and skill building increase self-esteem. The result is stronger, more independent boys who become better men, better spouses and better parents. Don’t we want all boys to have that chance?
